Cancer cells show altered expression of proteins involved in many biological processes. Consequently, novel anticancer drug candidates targeting these proteins are necessary. In our previous study, we synthesized benzoxazin-2-ones and evaluated their effects on cancer cell lines. In this study, we compared the anticancer activity of a new series of benzoxazin-2-ones against non-small cell lung cancer cell line (NCI-H460). The synthesized compounds were characterized by NMR spectroscopy. Docking results and molecular dynamics studies were performed to study the interaction between the synthesized compounds and their targets. The enzyme selectivity assay showed that benzoxazin-2-ones had an inhibitory effect on CYP1A1 and CYP2C9 in comparison with controls (benzyloxy- and 4-methylbenzyloxy groups). CYP3A4 was highly inhibited by compound 2 and compound 11, but not by compound 6 and compound 10. 82157476af
